Returning from a hunting trip in the north eastern part of the county Monday evening, James J. Hastings saw his Maxwell touring car skidding toward the side of the highway. He reversed the brakes, but the nose of the auto penetrated a small stream that flows the road and a little damage was done in the way of bent mudguards and a jammed headlight. The car was shelved for repairs in a local garage Tuesday morning.

Pumpkins of the extraordinary type are being displayed in the office window of the Reynolds hardware store, grown by residents of "Goose Green," and the rivalry seems to be about as great in the pumpkin growing contest between the peaceful citizens of "Goose Green" as it is between the residents of this quiet little community and their hard competitors, the inhabitants of "Squag Holler." Pumpkins grown by Peleg Hyman and Hi Mercer, mayor of Goose Green, were the first brought into town and then a monstrous big yellow fellow was put beside the former two, this one grown by Dr. Jackson, a pumpkin that will measure fully 20 inches in diameter.

Writing under the caption, "Seeing Cemeteries from Pittsburg to Norfolk," a contributor to the current issue of Park and Cemetery, the official organ of the National Cemetery Superintendents' association, has the following to say concerning the annual convention of the superintendents, which is to be held in Barre next year: "Yes, yes, that's all right about Norfolk, but what on earth can we see or learn at Barre when we go there next year?" some pessimistic friend may ask. In answer, you know James Scorgie, superintendent of Mount Auburn cemetery, Boston, and what a hard headed, practical fellow he is; he is one whom we cannot fool. Writing to me the other day, he told me that he has just returned from a motor trip to Barre, and his enthusiasm as regards Barre is great. He says the interest the folks there are taking in the coming convention is unbounded; they are making extravagant preparations for us, educationally as well as hospitably. And then think of Creevey and Adams, Ross and Scorgie, and Driscoll, Lord, Derry and others, every year friends whom we expect to see at their own cemeteries, either on our way to or from the convention. In fact I think Barre is going to be great!"

Blankets, Comforters and Bath Robe Blankets

You can see them displayed in our large show window. There are several reasons why you should buy these goods right now. The principal reason is price. Another reason is that lots of these kinds will not be on the market later.

New purchases made when these lots are closed will have to be high enough to take care of the expense of stitching, which will be a large advance over present prices. At the present time we are looking more to our customers' protection than to our own. This in the end will help us to a better business and more confidence in our business methods.
